

Paper: Solidarity and Performance Voting'

Heike Klüver, Humboldt Felix Hartmann, Humboldt
Macartan Humphreys, WZB and Columbia Ferdinand Geißler, Humboldt
Johannes Giesecke, Humboldt

May 2021

Abstract

Respondents support high levels of cash and vaccine transfers to help poorer nations. They are more supportive when health and economic risks of failing to provide support are high; but for the most part support does not depend on these calculations. Preferences over German policy are largely independent of what other countries are doing. Median support for vaccines (90 million) and cash (2 billion) corresponds closely to actual (100 million doses and 2.2 billion cash).

Contents

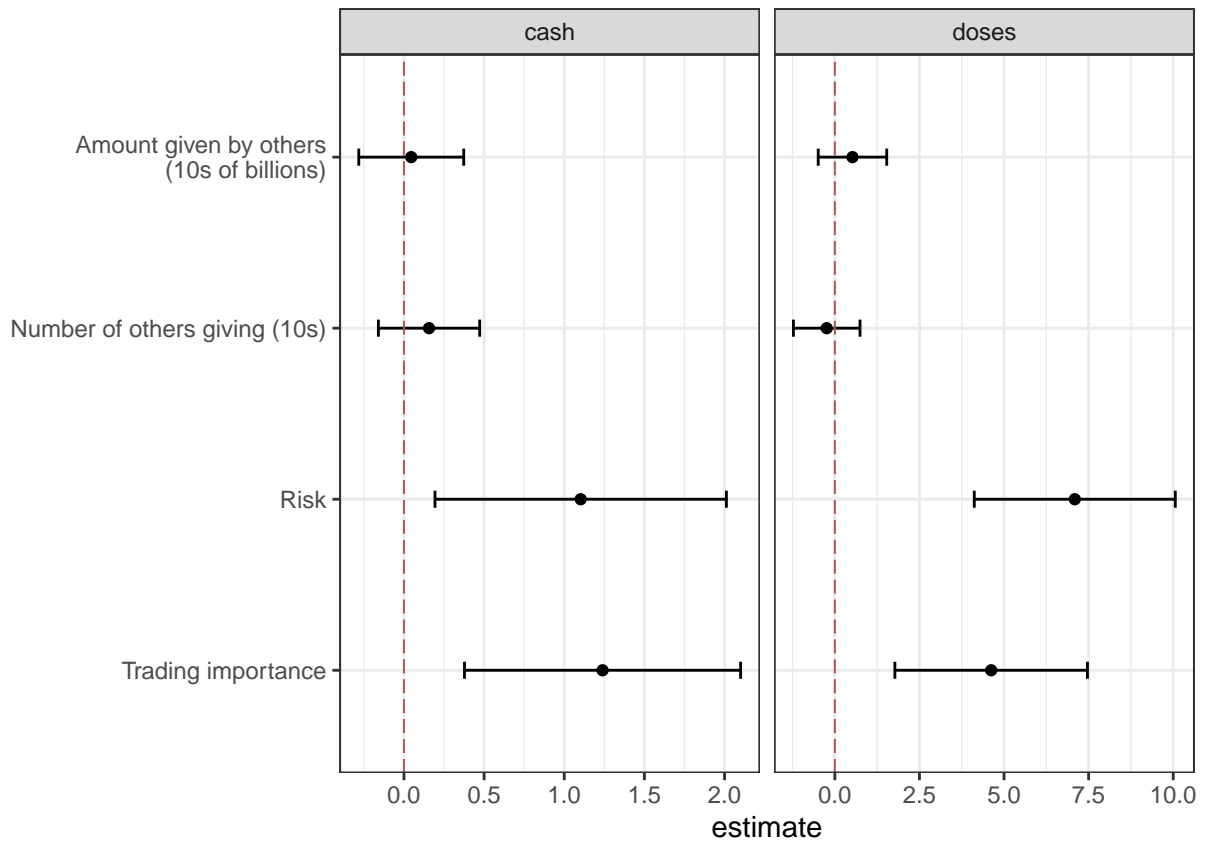

Introduction	1
Design	1
Results	1
Discussion	2

Introduction

Design

Results

figure_1

Discussion